Q: Ruby Websocket - What is `#` hash? I have to write a WS client in Ruby that works with a server written in PHP. The only interesting bit of code looks like this: `def init_socket(url) return nil if url.nil? sock = TCPSocket.new(url, 80) sock.connect @sock = sock end` After looking through the source code of websocket-rails, I can see that: `def initialize(url, options = {}) @connection_url = url @headers = {} @opts = {} @encode_params = true if @connection_url init_socket(@connection_url) end end` There is this snippet of code, and I don't know what it means: `sock = TCPSocket.new(url, 80)` I understand that it creates a socket, but don't know where it's connected to and what's the difference between this one and this: `sock = TCPSocket.new('www.google.com', 80)` A: It means that you want to create a TCP socket that connects to url. 80 is just a port. You could connect to port 80 on a local host or you could connect to port 80 on a remote host. A: `sock = TCPSocket.new(url, 80)` This code is used to create a socket with TCP protocol, which connects to url, and it takes port number of 80 (by default). If you want to connect to google.com then it should be `sock = TCPSocket.new('www.google.com', 80)` Q: Easiest ways to handle GUI changes in Asp.Net MVC? I have been reading through a lot of posts about the topic of event handling in Asp.Net MVC and so far I have not found a practical example of how the event mechanism works in Asp.Net MVC. Basically I have a following setup: Page X (where user clicks a button to generate a file) In this page a file is generated. When user closes the file a different view Y is shown (next to the file generated) Then user study is that the authors did not look for peritoneal factors, such as adhesions, which could have impacted the outcomes. Other limitations of our study include the retrospective nature of the design and the limited number of patients included in the study. Conclusions ===== We conclude that when compared with initial laparoscopy, conversion to laparotomy following TML significantly increases the risk for major intra-abdominal complications. The trend of increasing conversion rate from laparoscopy to laparotomy during the different phases of the learning curve is demonstrated in our study. TML is associated with less mortality, shorter LOS, and similar POPF rates, as compared with initial laparoscopic surgery. Conversion is associated with increased complication and death rates and longer LOS. We strongly believe that quality outcomes are associated with improved efficiency and effectiveness of a surgical technique. The key for surgeons to perform TML is to choose the right patients and the right surgeon, with an appropriate volume of experience. TML should be considered as a quality indicator for surgical outcomes, and potential treatment superiority should be demonstrated.
